Herald Moderator Staff Member. Reformed Baptist churches have a few things in common; the doctrines of grace being one of them. In addition, Reformed Baptist churches are also confessional, most subscribing to the 1689 Second London Baptist Confession of Faith. Most are covenantal in their theology, eschewing dispensationalism.

There are Reformed Baptists that are genuinely reformed and baptize based on confession only, but for the most part, Reformed theology practices infant baptism. Calvinistic soteriology – The majority of Southern Baptists would oppose a Reformed understanding of election and predestination. There are certainly exceptions to this, but the large majority would lean towards Arminianism (although they would not like to be called Arminian).
